

BECOME AN INSTITUTIONAL SPONSOR!

With its mission, mandate, and commitment to interdisciplinarity – from the molecular to the social and behavioral – population health science is essential to understanding and action that matters most to health progress. IAPHS is essential.

If your organization, department, or center is engaged in population health science, IAPHS can be an invaluable resource for you. By drawing together a diverse set of players – across institutions, disciplines, career stages, and the basic science to application continuum – IAPHS will serve both faculty and students in academia and researchers, policy-makers, and practitioners who address problems in population health.

Mike McGinnis, National Institute of Medicine

You can help us meet our goal!

IAPHS needs to raise $30,000 in 2016 to support the development of activities serving population health scientists and professionals and fostering science and its application.

How will IAPHS benefit your organization?

- Annual conferences provide opportunities for your faculty, staff, students, and leaders to learn about cutting edge science in population health, to network with others with different perspectives, and to share your own research and experience.
- Mentoring programs for early-stage professionals.
- Model syllabi for population health courses and other resources for teaching.
- Web-based resources that help population health scientists learn about research in different disciplines; find collaborators; hear about funding, training, and meeting opportunities; and develop skills in the translation of science.
- In the future, IAPHS will provide population health professionals at all levels opportunities for professional recognition and may undertake publication of a new journal as well as policy briefs.

A portrait of Hedy Lee, a woman with curly dark hair, smiling. She is wearing a white top.

IAPHS connects me to population health scholars across the country engaging in cutting-edge research that will help to reduce health disparities and improve the health of the nation.

Hedy Lee, University of Washington

Visit the IAPHS Website at www.iaphs.org

IAPHS is developing essential infrastructure to support and connect individuals and organizations committed to population health. Help to build it!

*James Jackson
University of Michigan*

How can organizations support IAPHS?

Organizations may choose to connect their gift to any of three alternative goals for the current year:

- Build IAPHS as a Membership Organization: support the costs of conducting an effective outreach campaign and legal costs of reincorporation.
- Build IAPHS Communications: support the development of the IAPHS Forum, a Web-based platform for communicating population health science including a Blog, research highlights, and interviews on current topics.
- Build Resources for Population Health Scientists: support the construction of Web-based resources such as an interactive searchable map for finding experts in population health, course syllabi, job and conference listings, and training opportunities.

How much should my organization contribute?

Suggested amounts for institutional sponsors are $2000, $5000, or $10,000. Of course, any contribution will be gratefully accepted!

How will my organization be acknowledged?

All Institutional donors will be recognized on the IAPHS website with their organizational logo and a link to their website.

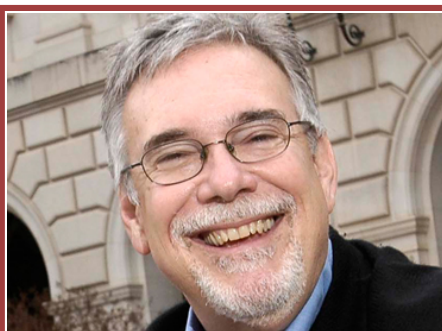

Are my contributions tax-deductible?

Yes! IAPHS is a charity recognized as tax-exempt by the IRS under Section 501(c)(3).

IAPHS will be a valuable resource to institutions interested in population health research and policy: it deserves our support!

Dave Kindig, University of Wisconsin

*Mark Hayward,
University of Texas,
Austin*

I'm encouraging my Center to become an institutional sponsor of IAPHS because of the professional and scientific benefits it will provide for faculty and students.

Please contact Yonette Thomas at ythomas@yfthomasdr.com to discuss specific details of your gift.

Thanks for Helping Us Grow!